This is because user is submitting their data (formatted in HTML) that I will then render as a canvas. I tried at least 4 different libraries including jsPDF and it didn't seem to do what I need. For example if user selects a set of data from drop-down I need the data to get uploaded to the server and then rendered. Some of the data is potentially 3-5k characters in size. Any ideas on the best way to do this? A: You may use the HTML5 canvas to create a PDF. You can follow this tutorial: For your particular problem, please have a look at this other SO answer: In particular, the guy who asked the question posted a js code that you could copy: package yaml // Set the writer error and return false. func yaml_emitter_set_writer_error(emitter *yaml_emitter_t, problem string) bool { emitter.error = yaml_WRITER_ERROR emitter.problem = problem return false } // Flush the output buffer. func yaml_emitter_flush(emitter *yaml_emitter_t) bool { if emitter

Fifty-five years ago the gold rush miners of the Klondike region of Canada found a trading post for all that wished to explore the untamed land to the north. Little did the miners know that within a century they would be joined by the prospector, the engineer, the artist, the photographer, the conservationist, and the business person all looking to explore and exploit the treasures found within the mountains and wilderness. The Arctic gold rush began. For a brief time, this was a paradise that knew no working or middle class and no other opportunity for new and ambitious dreams, no better hopes, and no difference between the rich and poor. In the early days there was little recognition of the sacredness and beauty of the land or of the Native culture. In the region the miners and their families, the explorers, the missionaries, the traders and the gold baron all found themselves in competition with each other for their own piece of the newly discovered
